SUPPLY CHAIN INSURANCE PROTECTION

Have you considered the need for a specialist?

Supply chain risk has become of vital importance in the wake of tsunamis, earthquakes, floods and a slew of other 'expensive' catastrophes over the past two years. When Steven Fisk, Principal at Barney & Barney LLC, addressed these issues for a swimwear client, he noticed that the business had no insurance protecting its supply chain.

Although the swimwear company's supply chain wasn't struck by the prior disasters, it does manufacture products in Mexico with subcontractors in Asia. Fisk helped design a master controlled global program for their entire international exposure; with increased efficiencies insuring a seamless program. "He has a lot of experience in the retail world," said the company's Accounting Manager. "He helped us get information on what we really needed."

Fisk also consolidated coverages that were literally held by underwriters all over the world, for an action sports apparel company. He found that the company didn't have coverage in key areas, and made the entire program easier to manage. "They are just so amazing," said the company's vice president of accounting and finance. "We've never had this kind of support from an insurance broker. I don't worry about it because he does."
